The existing office buildings have been insensitively altered and added to over the years. They provide a poor environment and are no longer fit for purpose. Respecting the historic grain of the site the design creates a transparent and welcoming civic frontage. The existing listed Stafford Place block is being refurbished in line with good conservation practice. A new flexible open plan office space is created to the rear, the form of which reflects historic development lines around a central linear atrium space.

A simple palette of materials is adopted contrasting the stone clad civic frontage with timber cladding to the rear but tied together with stainless steel roof and wall cladding.
